

New Call for Applications for CCD - SteDe International Master's Degree (Climate Change and Diversity: Sustainable Territorial Development) a.y. 2022/23

CCD - STeDe is a two-year international joint master's degree course (120 ECTS credits), which offers the opportunity to live study experiences, internship and research experiences in Europe and worldwide, preparing specialists and professionals to support organizations acting in the territory (enterprises, local communities, civil society organizations) and to draft sustainable territorial development policies in the context of climate adaptation combining economic, social, environmental, international and intercultural dimensions.

From the XII edition (2022/2024), the international master program adopts four novelties:

1. The new name "Climate Change and Diversity: Sustainable Territorial Development" (CCD-STeDe);
2. The possibility to choose among four academic paths
3. The work in four languages: English for all and, depending on the academic path, Spanish or Portuguese or French
4. The possibility to choose among different combination of learning: in presence, online, blended.

The four academic paths offer a variety of teachings and specialisations, in order to guarantee a complete, broad academic and unique urriculum. Depending on the interests and chosen language, the four academic paths are so organised:

- Climate change, sustainability, development / Cambio Climático, Sustentabilidad y Desarrollo (University of Padova and Universidad Andina Simón Bolívar; teaching languages: English and Spanish)
- Regional and local studies / Estudos Regionais e Locais (University of Padova and Universidade da Madeira; teaching languages: English and Portuguese)
- Territorial management / Aménagement du Territoire (University of Padova and Université Joseph Ki Zerbo; teaching languages: English and French)
- Environmental Management (University of Padova and University of Johannesburg; teaching languages: English and French)

In all the four academic paths, the first semester is carried out in presence at the University of Padova, while the second one depends on the choice of the academic path:

- First path: Universidad Andina Simón Bolívar (Quito, Ecuador) - online and in presence
- Second path: Universidade da Madeira (Portugal) - in presence
- Third path: Université Joseph Ki Zerbo (Ougadougou, Burkina Faso) - online and in presence
- Fourth path: University of Johannesburg (South Africa) - in presence

During the third semester lessons are mainly on line except the international summer school in Asia or Africa on the topics of Biodiversity, landscapes and human well-being, and the emerging issues in tourism and territorial transitions.

The fourth semester is dedicated for all to internship and thesis, to be carried everywhere in the world under the supervision of one of the Universities in the partnership.

CCD - STeDe refers to a Consortium of high-level international universities and professional partners in the field of sustainable territorial development. The 5 partner universities of the Consortium are the University of Padua, programme coordinator (Italy), Universidad Andina Simón Bolívar (Quito, Ecuador), Université OUAGA I Professor Joseph KI-ZERBO (Burkina Faso), Universidade da Madeira (Portugal), University of Johannesburg (South Africa).
